

Food Pantry Donation Guide

How to Use this Guide

The recommendations in this guide are based on the Healthy Eating Research Nutrition Guidelines for the Charitable Food System, also called HER Guidelines.

When choosing what foods to donate, these guidelines look at nutrition labels like the one to the right. Specifically:

- Saturated Fat
- Sodium
- Added Sugar

If Added Sugar isn't available, use Total Sugar instead

With the HER Guidelines, foods are sorted into 3 categories, "Choose Often," "Choose Sometimes," and "Choose Rarely" based on this information.

Before dropping off food at your local food pantry or your next food drive:

- Check expiration dates.
- Consider single-serve or easy-open packaging.
- Consider various dietary needs.
- Check with the pantry before donating perishable items.

Tips for Reading a Nutrition Label

Serving Size

Explains the size of a single serving and outlines how many servings are in the package.

Total Calories

Multiply the calories by the number of servings to get the total calories per container.

Limit Certain Nutrients

Compare food labels and choose options with lower amounts of saturated fat, sodium, and added sugar.

Beneficial Nutrients

Choose foods that contain beneficial nutrients such as calcium, fiber, iron, vitamin D, and potassium

% Daily Value

Larger numbers mean that the food contains more of that nutrient. Smaller numbers mean that the food contains less of that nutrient. Look for foods with higher % Daily values of fiber or iron, and look for foods with a lower % Daily Value of sodium, saturated fats, or added sugars.
